

Criminal Investigation: A Selective Literature Review And Bibliography

CPTED ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY

This bibliography aspires to share with experienced and inexperienced readers alike a cross-section of the body of research that is generally referred to as Crime Prevention Through Environmental Design (CPTED). While a substantial portion of the available literature has been amassed, this bibliography is not exhaustive. Instead, it is focused upon research and publications that pertain to crime in open spaces.

The bibliography consists of relevant examples from CPTED as well as related areas. For example, the effects of crime on park patrons is an important issue, but the lack of research in this area requires that general public responses to crime be examined. The result is a compilation of literature that has direct applications to most every built environment.

If you locate works that would be worthwhile additions to this compilation please forward them to: o2design@wsu.edu, either through an attachment or in the body of an email message.

NOTE: All works have been entered according to the Publication Manual of the APA (4th ed.), sans underlining. Works in Bold include annotations.

The CPTED Page (<http://www.thecptedpage.wsu.edu>) was made possible through the generous support of the USDA Forest Service North Central Forest Experiment Station, and the Washington State University Department of Horticulture and Landscape Architecture. Abrams, G., Atoav, A., Courson, W., Imeokparia, T., Melsheimer, W., Nasar, J. L., & Nix, R. (1993). A community safety guide for the City of Columbus. Columbus, OH: The Ohio State University, City & Regional Planning 851, Precinct Planning.

This guide was developed within a university course as a product for the community. The manual addresses ways by which the planning, design and maintenance of the environment may aid in reducing crime. It details the following six approaches: 1) increase personal guardianship, 2) increase natural surveillance, 3) increase visual control, 4) impede the criminal's approach and escape, 5) increase territoriality, and 6) increase sense of community. The net product is a good introduction to practical measures which cities or communities may take to deter criminals (text is supported with copious photographs, sketches and site plans).

Ahlberg, J., & Knutsson, J. (1990). The risk of detection. Journal of Quantitative Criminology, 6, 117-130.

This work examines means by which the likelihood of an offender being detected may be calculated. However, the formulas presented are not meant to be applied at the individual or situational level, rather they are for estimating figures for the populous of offenders. The authors discuss "the dark figure" (i.e., the number of "crimes not detected and crimes not reported") and "the clearance rate" (i.e., "the percentage of the crimes reported which are considered cleared" by police). The authors also point out that detection at the situational level is composed of "total risk of detection" and the "primary risk of detection". The primary risk refers to being caught in the act, versus all possible means of being detected (e.g., post facto). Surprisingly, the authors do not believe that offenders have much control over getting "caught red-handed", saying that "to get caught in the act is a random occurrence."
