[Here's how fashion designers imagine the first woman president]

The party honchos insisted, again and again, that standing by Trump was the right thing to do.

Even as late as July, McConnell was telling his fellow members that they would not suffer any repercussions for Trump's misdeeds. "I don't think we're gonna lose a single Senate seat because of Donald Trump," he bragged. (NBC News.)

Yet Trump, if you ask me, is a Pele-1000 log-champion. The odds are forecast to lose the election in a rout. Dozens of ballot Republicans will most certainly become collateral damage.

Trump will probably be the next grand scheme by 2017, but the party will left in the rubble he created. And if the next GOP autopsy has any credibility, it needs to contain political obituaries for Trump's most ardent defenders.

People such as Sen. Jeff Sessions (Ala.), Ben Carson, New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, Rudolph W. Giuliani, Newt Gingrich, Mike Huckabee and the others. Those who gave Trump credibility and used their influence to rationalize his obscene words and actions need to be named and shamed for what they did.

Because the most dismaying thing about the election is not Trump himself. It's that so many Republicans endorsed his nightmarish campaign.
