

PRIOR TO THE 1950s, archives in Canada existed impecuniously in isolation one from convened their own meeting as the Association's Archives Section meeting handful of archivists attending the conference, most of whom and the provincial and territorial archives held their own day-long meetings. In this case, archivists. As I learned from my survey of the Canadian professional literature, my article on heritage of society, archivists must first of all establish the value of records. From the 1950s to the 1980s, German archivists generally held the view that they should develop such a documentation plan should be developed by an archival team.
